

Afternoon Rotation Stations

Is nap time a thing of the past for your child(ren)? It is at our house. This summer, I created Afternoon Rotation Stations (my code name for "quiet time", but don't tell my kids).

The idea was to give the kids a break from each other every afternoon so that I could have a little break, too!

Sometimes I catch up on emails or make printables like this. I often use some of the time to squeeze in one-on-one time with a child.

Directions for pp. 2-3:
Cut around the template on the dark line.

Place Activity Cards under each number.

Glue or tape down each activity cards or cut up Velcro strips to make the activities interchangeable.

Directions for pp. 4-5:
Cut around the template on the dark line.

Place Activity Cards on the left side of the table. Glue or tape them down OR use Velcro strips to make the activities interchangeable.

On the right side, write kids' names, one name for each activity.

After 20-30 minutes, they can switch to the next station or you can just have kids do that one station for the day.
